Kennedy Arranges Mondale-Hart Talk, Issues Endorsement

By Milton Coleman

ST. PAUL, Minnesota - Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massa-ehusetts, a spoiler of Democratic Party unity in 1980, assumed the role of peacemaker Monday, as he endorsed Walter F. Mondale and arranged a meeting between Mr.
Mundale and his rival for the nomination, Senator Gary Hart. .

Mr. Mondale's aides announced that the former vice president and the Colorado senator would meet Tuesday in New York to begin what a Mondale aide termed "the beginning of reconciliation."

Later on Monday, in another sign of reconciliation, Mr. Mondale and Hart supporters in Washingum announced an agreement to head off a fight over nearly 600 delegates to the Democratic National Convention that Mr. Hart has contended were elected illegal-ly. But Mr. Hart said he would continue in seek the Democratic nomination. In St. Paul, Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Mondale made a joint appearance at the Minnesota state capital, where Mr. Kennedy promised "every effort of mind and heart and spirit" to belp Mr. Mondale in the fall campaign.

"We have had our full and open debate within the Democratic Party, and now is the time for us in stop debating ourselves and to start debating Ronald Reagan," Mr.

· Saying "there are no profound issues that divide us," Mr. Kenne-dy said Democrats had a "moral imperative . . . to heal our party, to defeat Ronald Reagan and to elect Fritz Mondale."

[In Washington, Mr. Hart said ne would not challenge Mondale delegates at the convention next month in exchange for rule changes that could enhance his chances for the nomination in 1988; The Associsted Press reported, That agreement was also mediated by Mr. Kennedy, The AP said; quoting unidentified Democratic sources.

[Mr. Hart said he had reached the decision because he did not as want to encourage "divisiveness of rancor" within the party. The Colo-rado senator has called some Mondale delegates "tainted" because they had been elected in states where Mondale delegate committees had been active. But Friday, Mr. Kennedy telephoned Mr. Hart, informed him that he planned to endorse Mr. Mondale and would visit him on Sunday, a Kennedy aide said.
At that time, Mr. Kennedy also offered to serve as a mediator beween the two men.

Following weekend discussions among their aides, Mr. Kennedy called Mr. Hart early Monday from Mr. Mondale's home in Minnesota and put Mr. Hart and Mr. Mondale then agreed to Tuesday's meeting,

Mr. Mondale said the meeting would not involve any discussion of Mr. Hart as a possible running

Watchdog Agency Claims Pentagon Improperly Spent Funds in Honduras

Dollar Climbs Further As U.S. Prime Rate Rises

Compiled by Our Stuff From Dispatches LONDON — The dollar surged Monday, fueled by the decision Friday nf U.S. congressional con-ferees to repeal the 30-percent withholding tax on interest paid to foreign investors and by a rise in the U.S. prime rate,

The rise in the prime, or base, interest rate to 13 percent from 12½ percent put it at its highest point ince October 1982, in the depths of the recession. The likely repeal of the withholding tax on interest paid to foreign investors from U.S. securities would make purchase of the securities more attactive to foreigners, thus increasing demand for dollars.

The dollar has also been propped for some time by the continued rapid expansion of the U.S. economy, which has tended to keep interest rates high because of strong credit demand and the Federal Reserve's fight against inflation. Last week, the government reported that the U.S. economy was growing at a faster-than-expected 5.7-percent annual rate in the second quarter. The British pound fell in London to a record low of $1,3506 Monday from $1,3632 Friday. In Frankfurt, kyo, the U.S. currency jumped in rates high or raise them even higher 238.325 yen from 235.30.

traders to lorgo profit taking and stay with the U.S. currency, First Chicago Corp. led the move m a 13 percent prime, which quickly became industrywide. It was the fourth prime-rate increase this year and the third in three months. The prime is used to determine rates on short-term loans to banks' most credit-worthy customers.
Many economists said Monday that U.S. banks were likely to raise their prime rates further in coming months unless market interest rates and business loan demand fall sharply.

"I believe this is the first in a

Radio Annie: Nazi Retreat Gave Allies a Propaganda Prize

Vatican Challenged on 'Liberation Theology' Theologians Defend Besieged Backers of Church Involvement in Politics principles to analyze social and political

By Kenneth A. Briggs New York Times Service

NEW YORK — A group of Roman Cath-olic theologians from Europe, Latin America and the United States has issued a statement that defends recent theological movements that call for church involvement in politics, especially in the Third World.

The statement Sunday also protested efforts on the part of high church officials to criticize and blunt these movements, known collectively as the "theology of liberation," by discrediting their spokesmen.

Though the officials are not named, a thinly veiled allusion to Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, the Vatican cardinal in charge of doctrine, appears in the text. The cardinal's views usually reflect those of Pope John Paul II, who has often addressed the themes that are central to the movement, sometimes criticizing aspects that he considers too political.

The statement is one of the strongest challenges to the Vatican in many years from Roman Catholie theologians. During the papacy of John Paul II, the trend has been away taking part in politics. At the same time, however, the pope has underscored themes such as human rights and economie justice that seem consistent with the themes of the liberation thinkers.

Cardinal Ratzinger, head of the Congrega-tion for the Doctrine of the Faith at the Vatican, fueled the latest round of debate over the movement by strongly attacking liberation theology last winter. This spring he called on Latin American bishops in Bogota in press further against certain forms of the theology that he said replace church teaching with Maixist ideology.

Soon after that, the bishops of Peru stepped up an investigation of the works of Dr. Gustavo Gutierrez, a leading liberation theologian. No charges have been made "Within the eburch," the statement said, "while some holding positions of authority have sometimes supported and accepted these movements of liberation, we have also seen people defamed, forbidden un teach theing ideologies for the gospel, under the influence of Marxism. Against such procedures we register a strong and vigorous protest." The statement continued: "As these movements are a sign of hope for the whole church, any premature intervention from higher au-thorities risks stifling the spirit, which animates and guides local enurches. We express our strong solidarity with these movements of liberation and with their theology. We protest against the suspicions and unjust criticisms registered against them." Among members of the unofficial liberal group, called Concilium, are some of the church's most widely discussed thinkers. Many members of the Concilium, which has been referred in as the "loyal opposition" for its divergence from official Vatican views over the course of its 20-year existence, have been investigated for their theology by the Vatican or local hierarchies.

They include Dr. Gutierrez and the Rev. Edward Schillebeeckx of the Netherlands, Vaucan; the Rev. Dr. J. Pohier of France, one of whose books on theology was censured by the Vatican, and the Rev. Hans Kung of West Germany, who was stripped of his license as a professor of Catholic theology by the Vatican Liberation theology arose more than a decade ago in Latin America framework of concepts promoting date to July 1, 1984, and increase justice for the regioo's poor and the payment to 5 as church thinkers joined forces oppressed.

The approach is pragmatic, resting on the assumption that theology emerges from the response of the church to burnan needs within a particular setting. The approach has since been adapted for use in other parts of the Third World and among feminists and minority groups elsewhere.

Opponents say liberation theology veers too much toward worldly concerns and accuse its advocates of subordinating religious to politi-cal ideals. They also contend that the willingness of some liberation-ists to employ Marxist analysis and their condoning of the right of the oppressed to use force discredit it as an authentic Christian theology.

By careful planning, Philips managed to lay 400 kilometres of cables and replace 10,000 traffic lights without disrupting city life. All with the maximum involvement of local labour and industry.

Clearing congestion is one element, controlling is another. Given the busy ports of London, Antwerp and Rotterdam, and the teeming off-shore activities, the North Sea is very prone to congestion.

The Strikes in Europe

In the Soviet Paradise

Other Opinion

The British miners' strike, now in its fourth mooth, is a direct challenge to the authority of an abrasively conservative prime minister. The German metal workers' strike is a different kind of politics. It is over social policy, and the response to an economy in which a diminishing number of people can produce a rising standard of living. To find anything in American labor history of importance equal to these two, you would have to go back nearly four decades to the coal and steel strikes of the Truman administration.

Since the British coal mines are nationalized, any miners' strike is against the government. This one is an unusually explicit test of wills between Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative cabinet and the radical leadership of the mine workers' union. Events have been building toward it ever since an earlier miners' strike, a decade ago, destroyed an earlier Conservative government.

The immediate issue in this strike is the government's decision to close some grossly unprofitable mines. But behind that lies the determination of the mine workers' leadership to have it out with Mrs. Thatcher. The ultimate issue here is, quite explicitly, the distribution of political power in Britain.

In Germany, it is a strike for a 35-hour week. The idea is to share the work in a country where the unemployment rate was under l percent in the early 1970s, but is over 9 percent now. Since the union wants the shorter bours with no cut in pay, it is turning into a long strike. The government is trying to stay out of it, but it knows that the settlement of this strike will set national economic policy in a larger sense than anything that it is likely to be able to do itself in the oext several years.

The emotional force behind both of these strikes is the delayed reaction to a period of high unemployment in Europe that has been running for several years and gives no sign of ending. European unemployment is different from the U.S. kind. Even during the past recession. Americans who lost their jobs were usually back on a payroll in a relatively short time. But the European countries are accumulating large populations of people who appear to be more or less permanently unemployed, and youngsters who are out of school but have never had steady work. Not only are the European unemployment rates now higher than those here, but the proportion of long-term unemployed is dramatically higher.

The inability to do anything about that raises, within European labor unions, questions about their own future, and whether they are in decline. The outcomes of these strikes will matter for reasons that run well beyond

Debt Crisis: Too Serious for the Bankers

A SPEN, Colorado — A critical time is at hand for the United States and other industrial countries on a menacing problem: The debts owed to their hanks by Third World governments. It is the sort of financial problem that many of us resist understanding. But the potential consequences, human and political, are too serious to leave this one to the hankers.

Suppose, for example, that some powerful outside institution told President Ronald Reagan today that be must reduce the real income of American families, raise taxes, cut government spending on Medicare and other programs and impose dras-tic restrictions on what U.S. companies may im-port, even essential parts. Would it be politically easy for Mr. Reagan, or even possible, to carry out such a prescription?

The example may seem far-fetched, but that is the medicine being prescribed to Third World governments today. And the consequences are far more severe than in the imagined U.S. scenario, because those countries are much poorer - have debt burden lies, per capita income has dropped 12 percent. Bot if a country has to cut back on production and investment, how will it develop the wealth to pay its debts in the long run? That is the question hamning the economic world today.

It is the more painful because experience in advanced countries with balance-of-payments problems, such as Britain, has shown that producoon losses are far worse than the export surplus achieved. A British expert with a talent for makingsuch issues understandable, Harold Lever, took a look at the Third World debt problem in a recent issue of The New York Review of Books. The headline was, "The Debt Won't Be Paid."

It was "in the highest degree improbable," Lord Lever wrote, that most developing countries would be able to achieve large financial surpluses and maintain them for years. Yet that would be required just to pay the interest on existing debts, not to mention the principal.

There is also the political reality. "Will it be politically feasible on a sustained basis," Lord Lever asked, "for the governments of the debtor countries to enforce the measures that would be required to achieve even the payment of interest?

Can it be seriously expected that hundreds of millions of the world's poorest populations would be content for long to toil away in order to transfer resources to their rich rentier creditors?"

Forcing Draconian measures on developing countries so they can keep paying the interest would also burt the rich creditors. For the debtors could pay only by cutting back deeply on their imports from the industrial world. U.S. exports to Latin America dropped 40 percent between 1981 and 1983. The Commerce Department estimates that that cost 400,000 U.S. jobs.

Moreover, there could be a terrible political price for forcing page countries into a financial price for forcing poor countries into a financial straightjacket. The trend toward democracy, now evident in Latin America and welcome to us, could be reversed. Argentina is the acute example. President Raul Alfonsin has won wide admiration for restoring human rights. Yet he faces fearful eco-nomic problems — inflation is now at 500 percent -and it will be hard for democracy to survive if the financial screw is tightened.

Accepting the fact that the borrowers cannot pay is a matter of realism, not tenderness. Henry Kissinger put it: "These payments simply cannot be made. None of the major debtor countries will be able simultaneously to pay its debt, achieve economic growth and maintain its political and social equilibrium."

For all those reasons it is in the urgent interest of the industrial countries to work ont new and lasting measures to ease the debt burden. If steps are not taken soon, there will be a growing incentive for the debtors to repudiate their debts - and that could have a devastating effect on many banks and the whole Western financial system.

Realistically, the banks will have to write off many of the loans, but over a long enough time and with enough official help so they can bear the hurden. Sacrifice will have to be shared, by poor countries and rich, their people and institut The New York Times.

Is 74, or Maybe Even 78, Too Old to Be the President?

By George W. Ball

25, 1919. For 18 months, be could function only marginally and litfully, and, for long periods, not at all. Lying partly paralyzed in a White House bedroom, he was guarded fiercely by his wife, doctor and secretary who, in effect, ran the country. He almost never saw anyone else, and communicated, if at all, only through memo-randums bearing his feeble scrawl or through oral statements by his wife.

During a special session of Congress, 28 pieces of legislation became law without presidential approval because Mr. Wilson was unable to sign or veto them. Meanwhile, the country and the world specular-ed with mounting anxiety about the true state of the president's condition.

Fortunately, the United States had just helped win a great war and no hostile power could challenge our security, but today we face an antagonist armed with ouclear weapons. As one who helped advise President John F. Kennedy during the Cuban missile crisis, I am haunted by the thought that we might again be caught up in a similar crisis at a time when our president lay disabled. How could we deal with a Soviet Union whose leaders knew that the only man empowered to push the ouclear button was too ill to think or act decisively - if he were even able to Congress wrestled with the problem of presidential disability in 1967 and produced the 25th Amendment, but disability is still a prescription for chaos. To turn over his powers to the vice president, a president must de-liver a declaration in writing to Congress that he can no longer carry out his duties. But no disabled president could make such a declaration sentient president, under the influence of a vigilant wife and devoted

New Moves In Pretoria's Game Plan

By John de St. Jorre

WASHINGTON — A political game that makes chess look like checkers is under way in southem Africa as Pretoria tries out a new strategy. If successful, it would bypass the Reagan administration's elaborate diplomacy for removing the Cubans from Angola and would eliminate the prospective UN role in decolorizing Namibia

South Africa signed a nonaggres-sion pact with Markist Mozambique in March and a similar accord with Swaziland two years ago, and is con-ducting a phased withdrawal of its forces from southern Angola. With new confidence. Pretoria is reaching out to broker "African" solutions with the black states of the region.

South Africa is pursuing a twotrack strategy, the American route and its own "regional" path. Both sides agree on the initial objective— the withdrawal of Pretoria's troops from southern Angola, an exercise that is now almost complete. The next move is Washington's.

The United States will try to per-suade Angola to send bome the 25,000 Cuban troops whose role has 25,000 Caban troops whose role has been to protect the government against Jonas Savimbi's dissident movement UNITA, the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola. If that happens, South Africa would be expected to keep a promise to hand over Namibia to the United Nations, which would arrange elections, draft a constitution, and aid the formation of a sovernment. aid the formation of a government.

The two tracks will stay close as the Americans pursue this "linkage" strategy. But if the Angolans balk and stalemate ensues, as Pretoria expects, the South Africans will feel free to part company with the United States. The "African gambit" will then be fully deployed, effectively bypassing American diplomacy.

The gambit is based on two assumptions. First, Pretoria now seems ready to accept a genuinely independent Namibia under the South-West Africa People's Organization, the Namibian nationalist movement. Second, South Africa is concerned that if there is no forward momentum after it has withdrawn its troops from Angola, SWAPO's military activity will escalate, threatening the newly established détente in the region.

Pretoria's aim now is to cooclude a Mozambique-style oonaggression pact with Angola in which Luanda will undertake to deny SWAPO access to Namibia. In return, South Africa will stay on its side of the border and cut off UNITA's aid.

With SWAPO's military option eliminated, Pretoria will exert pressure on the movement to become more involved in Namibia's internal politics, using its growing range of contacts and credibility with black Africa. Angola will be Pretoria's main target because if it accepts the gambit, there is a good chance the other black states will go along.

South Africa figures that the pros-pect of a senuine handover of power in Namibia, and the shelving of its demand for a prior commitment for a Cuban withdrawal, will be an offer that neither the leaders of Angola oor SWAPO can refuse.

Pretoria's plan is already visible. It has released Herman Toivo ja Toivo. a SWAPO founder, to show good faith. A regional, round-table conference of all the major parties has been floated, taking the United States by surprise. Regular contacts between internal SWAPO leaders in Namibia and their comrades elsewhere, as well as top-level meetings between South African officials and SWAPO are taking place. And President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia, a key frontline mediator, has helped to open up a dialogue between SWAPO and the internal Namibian parties in Lusaka. The meeting ended without an agreement on Namihia's independence, but the dialogue is expected to continue. The Cubans, Washington's bogeymen, do not seem to worry South Africa much anymore, if indeed they ever did. Linking their withdrawal with freeing Namibia was an American ploy that Pretoria endorsed when it was expedient. South Africa expeets Angola to send the Cubans home eventually, but its game plan gives Luanda more time to settle its differences with Jonas Savimbi who, with or without South African aid, will remain a powerful and potentially disruptive factor.

If South Africa's strategy works and produces a genuinely indepen-dent Namibia, approved by the African frontline states and hence pre-sumably by the international community, Pretoria will deserve credit for having finally solved one of the region's major problems, albeit one of its own making.

The Reagan administration will have to come to terms with a curious irony. One of its goals - an independent Namibia — will have been achieved. But its chosen method (the "linkage" tactic) and the golden prize of a Cuban departure from Angola in a presidential election year will have been finessed by the very power it was supposedly designed to benefit. in reality, South Africa is far more interested in consolidating "Pax Pretoriana" in the region and gaining time to rook its new constitution. which grants limited powers to the colored, or mixed-race, and Indian minorities. The bad news is that the constitution also reinforces the essentials of apartheid and excludes South Africa's 22 million blacks, the real losers in this chess game.

Republic. What Beijing does not speak about is the sustained unrest of the Tibetan people and the continued need for stringent military control. Since 1959, there have been at least 50 uprisings. There are more than 100,000 political prisoners. Amdo, Tibet's northeastern province, is home of the largest gulag in China - or anywhere in the world. It houses some 10 million prisoners — most of them Chinese. Beijing maintains a half-million troops in central Tibet one soldier for every 12 Tibetans. Tibet remains in an explosive state: In the latest round of arrests, last autumn, 3,000 dissidents were in-terred and 35 publicly executed. Beijing knows that it cannot bring stability to Tibet unless it is able to convince the Dalai Lama to return. He and 100,000 refugees have consti-tuted a democratic government in exile based in Dharamsala, India. They have recreated a self-sustaining society that preserves Tibetan culture and functions as a living refutation of China's claims. The six million people remaining in Tibet look to them as the sole hope for Tibetan freedom. The Chinese have sought unsuccessfully to persuade him to come home since 1977: They hope be will preside over an apparently legitimate government under their control. He has

China has behaved in a duplications and ultimately self-defeating manner. It continues to promise widespread liberalization and a measure of self-government. Nonetheless, Beijing has increased its troop strength in Tibet and drastically tightened public security.

Compromise is possible. The Tibetan government in exile has not admitted that it would accept anything less than complete indepen-dence. China maintains that Tibet is an inseparable part of the People's Republic. Yet both sides recognize that they will probably have to settle for some form of partial antonomy. fn order to reach a compromise, Beijing must admit that its claims to Tibet are unfounded and unrealistic. China can never hope to amend the inestimable tragedy of having destroyed a 2,100-year-old culture in a mere 25 years. It should, however, be able to find the courage to permit a new Tibet to rebuild itself from the

The six beeps broadcast by the British Broadcasting Corp. throughout the world are still the most reliable for setting watches, whether it's midnight in Moscow or daybreak in Hawaii.

On Tuesday, the centenary of the 1884 international conference in Washington when GMT was adopted internationally will be marked by the flight of a Concorde jetliner carrying a message of greetings to the town of Greenwich, Connecticut, at a speed faster than sound.

Seventeenth century navigators had established latitudes but had failed to work out the longitudes as a cross-reference for charting their course. So in 1675 King Charles II ordered an observatory built in Greenwich where a solution could be found.

Even after the longitudes were established, chaos persisted as each major scalaring nation followed its own meridian. It was not until 1911 that France and Ireland abandoned the "Paris meridian" and joined the Greenwich mean.

HONG KONG - Three prominent Hong Kong politicians on Monday urged residents to express their concerns about China's plans for Hong Kong, after they failed to persuade the Chinese leader, Deng Xiaoping, to pledge strong legislative powers for the colony.

Sir S.Y. Chung, who led a delega-tion to Beijing, said at a press con-ference: "It is now up to the public to express whether we do reflect their views truthfully and accurately, and to say whether they want to follow up with a request to both governments in the U.K. and Chi-

Over the past six months, com munity pressure groups have drafted proposals for "mini-constitu-tions" for Hong Kong. They all include a demand that Hong Kong people be empowered to draft and amend their laws. In response, Beijing has said the laws would be drafted in consultation with Hong Kong residents, but that mainland Chinese officials would draft them. Since none of the groups that drafted proposals is elected or can claim a mandate for Hong Kong's 5.5 million Chinese, 40 community leaders appointed to the Hong Kong government's advisory and legislative bodies have served to

Adolfo: Knits and a Whiff of Chanel

International Herald Tribune

N EW YORK — An American was stopped at Claridge's in London the other day and told she was wearing the same suit as Nancy Reagan. And so she was. The suit, which looked like a Chanel, was in fact by Adolfo, one of Mrs. Reagan's favorite American designers

The Cuban-born Adolfo is a former hatmaker who turned to dressmaking in the early 1960s and has captured a clientele of well-heeled Manhattan socialites, many of all wearing Adolfo suits, at his recent winter-and-fall collection in New York.

Although the New York collections were held several weeks ago.

HEBE DORSEY

Adolfo is known for showing later and doing his own thing, which he can afford to do because he has a faithful following. So here they were, piled four deep, the movers and the shakers of the New York luncheon hour, women you are sure to find regularly at La Grenouille or Le Cirque, munching carrots and dieting the expensive way.

As they stepped out of limnu-sines, it was easier to spot the wom-en not wearing Adolfos than the nther way around. Mildred Hilson, the philanthropist, was in a blackand-white Givenchy. "It works bei-ter for me," she said, adding that an Adolfo sait looked nice for travel-ing and board meetings bot "I don't like to see myself coming and going." As for Martha Phillips and her daugher, Lynn Manulis, of the Martha fashion salons, they stood out in real Chanel couture suits. After the show, Manulis said: "Adolfo said he layed my suit and he took a real close look at it."

Other customers went around looking like twins, and sometimes triplets and quadruplets. They often sat next to each other, in identical outfits, including a couple in white suits cut across by red, toysoldier braid. But far from being upset, these women looked frankly pleased.

To fashion cognoscenti, an Adolfo suit is a Chanel suit — with down to the contrasting braid, the. gold hutton-trimmed cuffs, the stacks of gold chains, the camellias, "She was very nld when I met Chanel at all, It looked the quilted bags and the famous her," he said, "She was 75. But she can fushing at its best."

also vintage Chanel, as were the Deauville pleated pajama pants and the long knitted cardigans. But somehow, it was different.

Trying in compare Chanel and Adolfo is like comparing "Coco," the Broadway musical based on Chanel's life, with the real thing. While a Chanel suit is totally French and undeniably more chic, an Adolfn suit is lighter, easier and definitely more colorful. It is also more practical and better suited to American women's tastes. In fact, it is more about a market than about fashion. And as such, it is a Adolfo himself made no bones about saying he admired the late Chanel very much.

Interviewed in his salon, which is lined with coromandel screens — another very Chanel touch — be said: "I would have loved to have been hired by the house of Chanel, like Karl Lagerfeld. I think I would have done a good job."
Yet, Adulfo is pained if you tell him that his suits are Chanel copies. "They aren't actually copies." he said. "They're very different even if they resemble Chanei's a lot."

So, where's the difference?
"First of all, they're all made of knits," he said. This explains the easy-to-keep, easy-to-pack aspect.
"I've developed machines which can make all these elaborate stitches," he said. The result, from a tweeds used by Chanel, except less you think?

Adolfo employs 250 people, most of whom work in a Long Island factory, but his little salnn has an intimate feeling, and Adulfo is known for understanding and accommodating his customers. Unlike most other houses, which function on a rigid, assembly-line pattern, Adolfo will change a fabric bere, a blouse there, which amounts to running a semi-custom trade.

Insisting that he never bought anything from Chanel's, "Not even a bottle of perfume," Adolfo added, "The same fabrie manufacturers who sell to Chanel nften come to me. But I always refuse to buy from them.

Actually, Adnilo thinks that somehow, he may have helped Chanel. "There's annther side to this story." be said. "When I started doing my clothes, Chanel was a very quiet house. Then people started talking about me. So you could say that I revived the interest

Hnw does the house of Chanel feel about Adulfo? After rumors that they were going to sue him, they apparently decided in drup the whole idea and in be generous about it. Said Lagerield, in a grand lighter, snugger feeling and the seigneur manner: "I think it's amusing. I think it's a compliment. ON HOW Japan Should Function as a Financial Center

THE ROLE of Japan as a capital exporter has received a lot of attention in recent international debate. What role is Japan presently prepared to play? And what role should it play in the future?

Watanabe: I think we see two clear functions emerging for Japan as an international money and capital market. First, as an international financial center on a par with New York and London, Tokyo is in an excellent position to facilitate international capital flows. Second, the expansion of the Japanese money and capital markets should contribute to the internationalization of the yen, thus enabling Japan to play a role commensurate with its position as the second largest economy in the free world.

Looking briefly at the history of recent developments, we see a dramatic transformation in the flow of funds in Japan in the 1970s. In the 1960s and before, large surpluses of funds in the personal sector were absorbed by investment in the corporate sector. But as growth slowed in the 1970s, corporate fund demand shrunk, and personal savings continued to rise. The surplus of savings was absorbed by the public sector as the government financed budget deficits and by the export of capital concurrent with surpluses on the current account of the balance of payments.

The shortage of funds in the external sector has grown as Japan has continued to run balance-of-payments surpluses. Assuming that the Japanese economy performs well and oil prices remain stable over the long term, Japan will still be reporting surpluses in the late 1980s and beyond.

In addition to finding new means for an effective domestic use of capital, by exporting capital Japan can broaden and diversify its response to the expectations of developing and advanced nations alike for financial cooperation.

In fact, Japan must move in this direction, and structural reasons indicate that it will. We are already beginning to see Japan function more actively as an intermediary in the international flow of funds, and I have every reason to believe this function will expand rapidly.

WOULD YOU briefly review the progress of expansion?

Watanabe: If we analyze how capital exports were financed in the 1970s, about one-quarter of long-term capital outflows was financed by a current account surplus, one-quarter by short-term lending as reflected in the surplus of the short-term capital account, and one-half by long-term capital inflows. By 1982, Japan was a net supplier of capital in the amount of $15 billion. This puts Japan side-by-side with such major international capital markets as Switzerland, at $13.7 billion, and the United Kingdom, at $15.1 billion.

As Japan's importance grows as an international financial center, I foresee the influx of additional short-term capital along with higher short-term borrowings and long-term loans. Naturally, we must create the environment that will support Japan's role as an international money and capital market.

As the capital market grows, the yen will need to function more as a reserve currency and currency of settlement, complementing the role the dollar has played for many years. As the recent report of the Yen/Dollar Committee (Working Group of Joint Japan-U.S. Ad Hoc Group on Yen/Dollar Exchange Rate, Financial and Capital Market Issues to the respective finance ministers) reveals, Japan has clearly chosen to move decisively toward internationalizing the yen.

wide has been to provide better access to the Japanese capital market. How do you evaluate recent steps in this direction?

Watanabe: I think two factors influence access to the market. One is participation of overseas financial institutions in the Japanese market. In the past they have operated under the same conditions as domestic institutions. All have been provided "equal opportunity." Recently, however, we hear demands that proceed from a principle of "reciprocity."

Here, I think caution is merited. The principle of reciprocity implicitly denies a country autonomy and independence in managing its financial system. That denial is unacceptable. I am, however, the first to agree with the arguments presented by the proponents of reciprocity when their opinions have obvious merit in promoting the efficiency of the Japanese financial system.

Another concrete issue has been the liberalization of the money and capital markets. The secondary markets are absolutely open to resident and nonresident alike. But room exists for further liberalization of the primary market, including yen-denominated foreign bonds, or samurai bonds, as they are called.

The first domestic issue of yendenominated bonds by a foreign entity was in 1970. The market has expanded steadily since then and by 1983 reached $3.9 billion. At first the issuers were principally international financial institutions, but the list has grown to include national governments and various government agencies.

Since 1979 private corporations have had access to the market, but the number of issues has been few. The principal reasons have been the insistence of authorities on collateral, the complexity of issuing procedures, and the inflexibility of offering terms and conditions.

As I said, we must proceed on the basis of Japan making its own decisions on the pace of liberalization. When the system or customs are too inflexible compared to international norms, as participants in the market we must hasten the process of change. That is our duty.

The signs of change are readily evident. On May 30 the Yen/Dollar Committee agreed on the liberalization of the Euroyen market. This move will also have an effect on the domestic market, accelerating the process of liberalization. As well, it will give nonresidents much easier access to the issue market for yen bonds.

At present, the Securities Council Commission, an advisory group for the Minister of Finance, is studying the current status of the bond market. I fully expect the results of its deliberations will prompt other efforts toward liberalization.

Through these efforts, I can state with confidence that, step by step, Japan is moving toward becoming an international financial center.

DOMESTICALLY, as well, calls are heard for further liberalization of the financial system. One issue is development of the money market. Just how soon do you foresee the introduction of new instruments?

Watanabe: The Japanese money market is qualitatively and quantitatively inferior to those in the United States and Europe. In September 1983 it was only one-tenth the size of the U.S. money market, and if we limit the definition to the really open part of the market, only one-twentieth. Right now this open market encompasses only the gensaki, or bond repurchase agreements, and negotiable CDs. That is not a great variety of instruments.

From the perspective of almost everyone concerned, the creation of a robust money market must have top priority in the process of deregulating Japan's financial system. We in the securities industry are committed to this task.

Several factors should accelerate the development process. First, the government must start refinancing in 1985 and beyond the large volume of long-term debt it began issuing in 1975. The initial step to facilitate this process will need to be a shortening of maturities on government bonds, thus creating a treasury bill market.

Second, the Yen/Dollar Committee recently agreed to establish a yen Banker's Acceptance market at the earliest possible time. This should benefit domestic traders as well as trading partners in Southeast Asia, Oceania, and elsewhere.

Third, the business community is expressing its desire for a commercial paper market. Those of us in the securities industry would like to respond.

A CLOSELY related problem is the interest rate structure. How fast will Japan move in the direction of allowing the market to determine interest rates?

Watanabe: The question of the mechanism for determining interest rates arose with the rapid growth of the secondary market for government bonds. Because the yields on these bonds moved with the balance of supply and demand, they tended to be more attractive than the yields on regulated instruments. Thus, we witnessed the shift of corporate liquidity from bank deposits to bonds. The introduction of CDs and their floating rates gave the banks a means with which to compete.

The conflict between regulated and free rates can only intensify. The inevitable result will be further pressure to liberalize interest rates and the growth of the money market. The rapid chain of events in the United States is ample evidence of just how fast change can be effected.

RECEIVELY many foreign financial institutions have been opening operations in Japan in expectation of growing capital inflows and outflows. What do you see as their role in the market?

Watanabe: At present nine foreign securities companies have branch operations in Japan, and many more have representative offices. The nine are all members of the Securities Dealers Association of Japan, of which I am chairman. I welcome their contributions and seek their cooperation in developing the securities market in Japan.

I think there are two main motivations for the entry of commercial and investment banking organizations into the Japanese market. One is their superior financial tech nology and expertise in several fields. A good example is the international cash management services offered by Citibank.

Another is the profits to be obtained through diversification and the promotion of synergies. The Japanese capital market has presented obvious attractions as it has grown. We have seen, for example, a dramatic jump in the volume of pension and other institutional funds from Europe and the United States flowing into Japanese equities.

All the leading investment managers are competing to obtain these accounts. I am pleased to say Nikko International Capital Management has been extremely successful because of an excellent performance record that is the best among all Japanese investment advisers who handled U.S. pension funds in 1983.

My own perspective is that healthy competition is requisite for the healthy development of a capital market. Our international colleagues are in a position to meet the diverse needs of Japanese investors. I only hope that we can prove ourselves able competitors.

FUTURES AND OPTIONS

Traders Aided by 'Strangles' For Tools On Treasury-Bond Options Up by 27%

New York Times Service

EW YORK - When in doubt about an option mar-

Ew YORK — When in doubt about an option market's direction, many professional traders simply "strangle" it, and traders in Treasury-bond options who did so last week profited handsomely.

An options "strangle" involves buying equal amounts of calls and puts. Calls are the right, but not the obligation, to buy the underlying futures at a fixed price within a specified time. Puts are the right to sell these contracts under the same conditions. An option's price is called the premium.

Early last week, many Treasury-bond options traders were extremely nervous as they awaited the government's "lash fig-extremely nervous as they awaited the government's "flash figures" on the U.S. gross national product for the second quarter, The figure was to be reported on Wednesday. Many economists had forecast a sharp drop in the GNP, which would have been bullish for the battered bond market. Just as many other economists predicted the figure would show a still booming econo-

a windfall because of the size of the number."

What they got was my, which would mean greater demand for credit and higher interest rates. Any rise in interest rates depresses the value of bonds and other fixed-income securities that yield lower rates. By Tuesday, many professional bond-options traders had stopped bitting their nails and were busily strangling the market. When the "flash figures" indicated an unexpectedly large rise of 5.7 percent in the GNP in the current quarter, the stranglers were ecstatic.

"At worst, the stranglers expected to lose a few dollars in their hedged position; at best they expected modest gains," said Richard L. Sandor, senior vice president at Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. in Chicago, "But what they got was a windfall because of the size of the number." Mr. Sandor is an authority on financial futures and options markets.

Options strangles are often likened to the "spread" or "strad-dle" long used by futures traders, but Mr. Sandor said that while both were used to hedge positions, further comparisons could prove deceptive.

For instance, he explained that strangles involve out-of-themoney options; there are no such things in futures. Out-of-themoney options usually have little intrinsic value at the moment and sell for much lower premiums than in-the-money contracts that already show a profit. Also, stranglers rarely buy any but the nearest option, which, in the case of the Treasury bonds, expires

Mr. Sandor continued: "The situation at last Tuesday's close found the September bond futures at 62 5/32; the 58 puts on that option at 28/64, and the 66 calls also trading at 28/64. The premiums were made to order for a strangle."

Each 32nd of a point in bond futures represents $31.25 per contact with a face value of $100,000. At 62 5/32, they were trading, in effect, at just over 62 cents on the dollar. Bond options are traded in 64ths of a point, which are worth $15.63 each.

At Wednesday's close, after the stunning flash GNP figure had savaged bond prices, the premiums on bond options puts had soared to 49/64, while those on the calls had sunk to 17/64. This meant that the put side of the strangle had gained 21/64, or $328.23, while the call side had lost 11/64, or $171.93. Thus the gain on the strangle was $156.30.

By Friday's close, those who kept their stranglehold had even larger gams. The 58 pans ended at 58/64, up $468.90 from Tuesday's close, The 66 calls closed at 13/64, down $234.45. In sum, the two out-of-the-money options had produced a profit of $234.45 on each strangle.

Meanwhile, the spot September Treasury-bond futures closed Friday at 60 7/32, down 2 full points and 20/32nds, representing a price loss of $2,625 on the week. Put another way, a trader who had bought the spot September bond futures at last Monday's opening would have lost the entire initial margin, or cash outlay, required to buy a contract.

Still, Treasury-bond futures are expected to continue to be the most actively traded contracts on any futures market. Last week, an estimated 900,000 bond futures changed hands. Volume in bond options, while growing rapidly, was estimated at roughly Brokers expect both volumes to climb this week as government securities dealers begin hedging their planned purchases at the Treasury's next major bond anction. Their hedging operation will, as usual, consist of selling bond futures and options short.

May Rise Follows A Jump in April

By Daniel F. Cuff New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Orders for machine tools jumped 27 percent in the United States in May from April as the industry continued its month-by-month strengthening, the National Machine Tool Builders Association reported. The in-crease followed a 23-percent rise in

Celanese Is Sticking With the Basics THE CELANESE RECOVERY Profits Have its Three Big Businesses

New York Times Service NEW YORK - In recent years, most of the American chemical industry has been playing follow the leader. Du Pont Co., the largest U.S. chemical maker, bought Conoco Inc. Dow Chemical, No. 2 in the business, acquired a pharmaccutical quer-arion. And many other chemical companies are also responding to the huge worldwide overca-pacity in basic chemicals by diversifying. But Celanese Corp. has marched to a different drummer, keeping a stubborn commitment to its core businesses.

So far, its nonconformist strat-egy is paying off. After being the only major chemical company to lose money in 1982, Celanese is likely to outperform the industry this year and report record profits. But it is too soon for the company to rest on its laurels: Because the chemical industry is so cyclical, Celanese's failure to diversify could leave it especially vulnerable to the next down-

"In fibers and commodity chemicals, Celanese is experiencing a fairly healthy rebound." said Elizabeth A. Sagurton, an analyst with Standard & Poor's. "But looking out beyond the current recovery, both areas are subject to downturns in a heavy way because of recurring overcapaci-ty. The nature of these products is wide cyclical swings." Company officials say Celanese is tinkering with the idea of diversifying through either ac-quisitions or new products, but the time for tinkering may be running out. Although Mr. Macomber's strategy looks good this year, it was a drastically different story in 1982, when the recession depressed prices and pushed down Celanese's sales volume in those products by almost 20 percent.

Making things worse, the oil ghit crippled sales of its specialty chemicals. The Chinese canceled a 200,000-ton order for polyester fiber - about half of which was to come from Celanese. Latin Americans Grant Argentina Debt Extension

By Juan de Onis Los Angeles Times Service

CARTAGENA, Colombia Argentina has obtained a 30-day reprieve from its Latin American creditors on repayment of a $300million loan after promising to make a serious effort to reach a stabilization agreement with the International Monetary Fund.

The assurances were given by Argentina's economics minister, Bernardo Grinspun, in private meetings with other finance ministers attending the Latin American debt conference of 11 countries here last week, Finance Minister Edgar Gutiérrez Castro of Colombia reported Sunday.

As a result of what Mr. Gutiérrez Castro called a "strong moral commitment" by Argentina to pay its debt, the finance ministers of Mexico, Brazil, Colombia and Venezuela agreed to extend the repayment deadline of June 30 for the $300 million that they lent to Argentina in March to prevent an Argentine default on interest payments to international banks.

But the Latin American loan from the four nations' central banks was only a minor obligation, part of Argentina's total foreign debt of $43 billion — which the new Buenos Aires administration is trying to refinance.

Attempts to reach agreement with creditor banks have been stalled by Argentina's resistance to accepting a stabilization agreement with the IMF that would require sharp reductions in budget deficits, wage restraints and other anti-inflationary measures. Argentine inflation rate now exceeds 500 per-

Mr. Grinspun flew to New York on Saturday for a meeting Monday with William R. Rhodes, chairman of the creditor-bank steering committee for Argentina. Before leaving Cartagena, Mr. Grinspun said he is prepared to go to Washington to talk with Jacques de Larosière, managing director of the IMF. "The conference here has strengthened our position for nego-tiating an acceptable agreement with the creditors," Mr. Grinspun added before departing.

Court Postpones

PARIS - The Paris Commercial Court announced Monday that it has postponed mitil June 28 a ruling on an application by Creusot-Loire, the French heavy-engineering group, to go into receivership. The court had been expected to make its ruling on Monday. It said it granted the postponement, the fourth in two weeks, after Creusot-Loire asked for a further delay.

The government, saying that such a request "necessarily means Creusot-Loire has new proposals to make," said it would study such suggestions with the greatest attention. The court said that in view of "a certain convergence of views between the company and the government, which has never existed before," a definitive so-lution to company's problems is foresceable. It gave no details.

Orion to Stop Insuring Satellites

By Elizaberh Tucker Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Orion Insurance Co., a leading London underwriter of insurance for satellites, has decided not to take on any new insurance contracts for either government or commercial space pro-jects because of the high number of satellite losses this year and the general unprofitability of the busi-

The decision last week is expected to cause other insurance companies to re-evaluate their policy of underwriting satellite launches and to reduce the amount of insurance available for such projects.

Trusthouse Forte Says Profit Up 42% in Half

LONDON — Trusthouse Forte PLC said Monday that pretax profit for the six months ended April 30 rose 42 percent to £33.7 million from £23.7 million a year earlier, on revenue that rose 14 percent to £503.3 million from £440.2 million.

The hotel and catering company said that the greater part of earn-ings are always produced in the second half of the financial year and said the first-half results conpled with good trading and forward bookings since April 30 make the board expect continued improvement for the year.

Construction Is to Resume At Seabrook

United Press International WESTBOROUGH, Massasusetts - Construction at the troubled Seabrook nuclear power plant in New Hampshire will resume next week under a plan that is 10 bring about 4,200 employees back to work under new independent management.

The owners voted Saturday to resume construction of the Unit I reactor by July 2 under New Hampshire Yankee, a ocwly created entity that is to eventually become part of Yankee Atomic Electric Co., owner of the Yankee Atomic Power Plant in Rowe, Massachusetts. The project was halted 10 weeks ago because of the growing debt incurred by its principal owner. Public Service Co. nf New Hampshire, which has a 35.6-percent interest. Under the plan, responsibility for finishing the project will be transferred to New Hamp-shire Yankee, which expects to hire back about 800 employees during the next few weeks and expects eventually to have 4,200 workers on the site, including 1.000 managerial employees.

The Seabrook reactor 2 project, which was terminated last fall, was not part of the plan.

23,000 workers. The company has also-closed-a polyester plant that produced 200 million pounds a year. These measures, together with rapidly improving volume and slightly increased prices, are expecied to propel the company's latest cyclical upswing to new highs.

Mr. Macomber's strategy is to defend, and even expand, Celan-ese's turf by being the low-cost producer in its areas of concentration. so that, as higher-cost producers are forced out. Celanese can increase its market share. In the field of polyester fiber, for example, the number of producers has shrunk from 11 to four since 1978, enabling Celanese to capture an everlarger market share.

Company officials estimate that polyester demand will grow about 20 percent faster than the gross national product — but Celanese aims to increase its polyester sales' faster than that by picking up the market share others leave behind.

Polyester is extremely important to Celanese because the company is, along with Du Pont, one of the world's two largest producers. Its overseas investments make clear that the company bas staked a large part of its future on methanol -a liquid hydrocarbon that can be used in place of gasoline or as a gasoline additive. With 25 percent of total capacity. Celanese is the West's largest producer of the substance. It began investing beavily in methanol in the late 1970s when management thought gasoline prices would continue to rise and methanni would quickly capture a large share of the gasoline market.

But gasoline prices have slipped and methanol has not been the gold mine Celanese had boped. "It's just an albatross around their oeck," Mr. Raman said. While basic chemicals are still weak, Celanese's specialty chemi-cals area has picked up. The com-pany's international division, too, is registering better results than in 1982. Although the economies in LYON, France - Spain headed for Paris on Monday hoping to win both the title and the public's respect when it meets France in the even if it did not reach the tourna-European soccer championship fi- ment final.

Spain Seeks to Change

nal on Wednesday. The Spanish coach, Miguel Munoz. and his players feel aggrieved that they have not been given due credit for their results so far.

The Spaniards' 5-4 penalty shoot-out victory over Denmark in Sunday night's semifinal was greeted with the same wry smiles which met their 12-1 destruction of hapless Malta in December - a result which saw the 1964 European champions edge out the Nether-lands on goal difference.

"I would point out to our critics that we lost only one of our eight qualifying games and that we are still unbeaten in France," said Munoz, who succeeded Jose Santamaria as Spanish coach after the 1982 World Cup failure. "Of course the penalty decider was un-satisfactory, but we merely follow the rules, we don't dictate them." The torrid semifinal, which ended 1-1 after extra time, was costly to the Spain, which will be without two of its best players, midfielder Rafael Gordillo and defender Antonio Maceda, in the final. Both were suspended for one second time in the tournament.

The Danish coach, Sepp Piontek, said his team had proven its worth

"What we showed with this mateh was that Denmark can play inspired attacking soccer," said Piontek, whose team had won admiration and supporters with its all-attack style and determination. "We did everything in our power.

"We knew this would be a difficult match and, before the final whistle, we never had the impression that our work was already done and the final was waiting for us. We knew Spain would be well prepared psychologically and would be be a tough test."

Piontek said the game was decided by small margins, just like the France-Portugal semifinal on Satorday, which the French won when Michel Platini scored in the last minute of extra time to cap a brilliant comeback. "We had our chances to win the match in the second half." Piontek said. "We had our chances to win the match in the second half, Piontek said, "We have no excuses, You have to accept the defeat al-(Reuters, UPI, AP)

Vice President, Anyone?

WASHINGTON — 1 was and he also needs the senior citizen walking down the street vote. I could be a twofer." minding my own business when I passed the "Mondale for President" headquarters building. There was a long line out front and l asked a man what was going on. "The candidate is interviewing people to be his vice president," he replied. "What did he do, put an ad io the paper?" I asked. "Not exactly. But he put out word to all the leaders of the unions, women and minority groups that he'd talk to anyone who wanted the iob. I heard about it from my cousin who works with 'Hispanic loggers for Mondale.

Buchwald "I didn'i know Mondale had time to see everyone who wanted to be vice president."

"He has nothing else to do until the July onnveouon. By interviewing vice presidential candidates he can keep his name in the paper. You want to get in line?"

"It looks awfully long." That's what I thought, but it moves pretty fast. Every ooce in a while a volunteer brings out coffee and doughnuts so it isn't as bad as vou would think."

I had nothing to do for the afternoon so I went to the end of the line. There was a woman senior citizen in front of me.

"You going to go for it?" f asked her.
"Why not?" she said. "He's going to need a woman on the ticket.

Donald Duck's Secret of Long Life

By Vincent Canby New York Times Service

N EW YORK — To be per-fectly frank, Mickey Mouse has always seemed a bit of a prig. a thoroughly decent, unassuming sort of fellow who's a naturalborn leader, but still a prig. He's the kid who's always elected president of his class without half trying, who does his homework on time and who, if he were on the football team, would never dream of breaking training no matter how alluring the circumstances. It's in his character to do good deeds for the world's less fortunate and to say — and to believe — that it's always darkest before the dawn. There's nothing wrong with Michey Mouse except that he's practically perfect.

This may be why all of us continue to be drawn to that other, far more fallible Walt Disney creation, Donald Duck, who just turned 50 years old.

Donald Duck, who made his first. unbilled appearance in a rather ghastly 1934 Silly Sympho-ny called "The Wise Little Hen." was the first of a whole galaxy of Hollywood cartoon stars whose appeal lies not in their perfection but in their not-always-admirable eccentricities.

Donald is every child who has not yet learned that it's often more prudent to hold one's temper than to turn rose-red with anger and let the fury fly. He is loudmouthed, excitable, impa-tient, shortsighted and accidentprone. In "Fire Chief" (1940), in which he plays the title role, be's the last one to realize that the fire to which he's racing is consuming the firehouse he's just left. When at last he does return, it's the overexcited Donald who attaches the water hose to a gasolioe drum, with the predictable results.

Following Donald Duck came the carrot-chomping, laid-back Bugs Bunny, who made his first film as his own star, "A Wild Hare," in 1940; Tom and Jerry. the best of the cat-and-mouse and mechanized dolls. teams, which, in the 1940s, woo seven Oscars; and still another cat, Sylvester, whose ravenous, single-minded pursuit of Tweety Pie, a small, fat, forever-unobtainable canary with a speech impedimeot, delighted audiences the Avery and Jones cartoons. from the 1940s into the 1960s.

SPAIN

To the best of my knowledge, no one has done a definitive study on the ways in which Donald Duck and his contemporaries have influenced the comedy styles of live-action actors and directors of succeeding genera-

The current Film Comment reports that the cartonns of Tex Avery (Bugs Bunny) and Chuck Jones (Tom and Jerry) are favorites of Joe Dante, the director of the peculiarly lunatic new horror film, "Gremlins," which contains a lot of the anarchic mayhem associated with cartoons, though it's played out with live actors

Watching "Gbostbusters," was struck by bow much Bill Murray, Dan Aykroyd, Harold Ramis and the other actors, as well as Ivan Reitman, the director, appear to have learned from Murray doesn't look like Bugs

Bunny, and his vocal delivery is anything except Bugs-strident, but his apparent nonchalance in all circumstances, including a sequence in which he must deal with a demoniacally possessed Sigourney Weaver, is pure Bugs

The anarchy of "National Lampoon's Animal House," and of all the various "Aoimal House" spinoffs, only begins to make sense if one sees it as an extension of the kind of madworld comedy of the animated shorts of 30 and 40 years ago. The spectacular automobile chases and crashes of "The Blues Brothers" come very close to being duplications of the kind of essentially harmless encounters that Donald Duck and Bugs Burny are forever having with TNT, gas-oline, bombs, paracoutes that fail and other lethal paraphernalia. It's true, I think, that the old cartoons succeeded largely by nignly with real childhood fears and fantasies of falling, flying and being slapped, bopped and misunderstood. Today, "Ghost-busters," "Stripes," "Animal House" and the other cartoonlike, live-action films are making the same connection. The main difference is that the language and the gags are more hip.

Too frequently, however, Reitman and his associates ignore the primary rule of cartoon-narrative: Keep everything moving fast. In spite of its appealing an-archy, "Ghostbusters" seems lazy. Scene after scene amble by at Murray's amiable pace. Because there's no real comic structure to any sequence, there's no great onmic payoff. One laughs at the point of view more often than at the gag

For vintage Dooald Duck, bowever, one must look to such exuberant offerings as "Donald's Happy Birthday" (1949), in which Donald is seen as a com-pletely wrong-headed uncle with his three small nephews. The nephews, discovered by Donald with the box of cigars that was to be his birthday present, are them-selves forced to smoke them, and the story ends on an uncharacteristically somber note that is, as any child will tell you, absolutely right: Donald slinking away in

"Don Donald" (1937) unfolds the essential Donald duck per-sonality for the first time, as Donsonalty for the first time, as Don-ald attempts to woo Daisy Duck by heedlessly trading in his faith-ful burro for a roadster that has a rumble seat. "The Autograph House" (1940) is a funny and charming recollection of a Hollywood now gone, with Donald, as the world's most pushy autograph hunter, having encounters with caricatures of Greta Garbo, Mickey Rooney, Shirley Temple, Katharine Hepburn and the Ritz

Brothers, among others, The classic "Chip an' Dale" (1947), in which Donald is outwitted by two elegantly named chipmunks, is virtually an anthology of Donald Duck doubletakes, nasty laughs (when he's about to do something rotten to someone smaller than himself) and his sudden "oh-ohs," when that something rotten backfires on him.

Many happy returns, Donald.

Rupert Rhymes, the opera company's administrative di-rector, defended the decision by the director, Jonathan Miller, not to Lennons set up to help children's hire White. "I think it's a travesty causes around the world. She did of justice to describe it as a racist stand," he said. He did not give a reason for Miller's decision. The opera company this week is playing in the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, where the tour ends June 30. Its productions, particularly Miller's gangster-style version of Verdi's "Rigoletto," in which players wear modern street clothes, have won standing ovations.

Scotland Yard said Monday it is investigating a brawl between two members of Queen Elizabeth II's staff at Windsor Castle, which allegedly broke out while a royal party was going on nearby, the Lon-don Daily Telegraph reported. One man was injured in the fight and taken to hospital. Scotland Yard declined to say who was involved in the incident or what sparked the fight. But The Daily Telegraph said one of the men involved was a fontman. It said the queen had left the party, held to celebrate Prince Edward's success in first-year exams at Cambridge University, before the fight broke out. . . Meanwhile Buckingham Palace denied newspaper reports that Prince Andrew was whacked on the bottom six times in a restaurant where waitresses in short skirts punish "naughty" diners, Britain's tabloid newspapers said Monday. Four Sunday newspapers reported the mock caning at School Dinners, a London club where spankings are administered by waitresses dressed in short schoolgirl skirts and black stockings. Bot the Daily Mail quoted a Buckingham Palace aide as saying: "It's true he went to the restaurant, but no one laid a hand London on the ground of suspected on him, let alone caned him."
